Dear Guest of the House

Those who are worthy... are invited.
And those who are invited... are Chosen.

We do not measure worth by wealth, nor by title, nor by the size of what one brings to our door. We measure it by what one intends to build, and by the patience to build it properly.

But there are those for whom this House was never intended... and for them, the door will never open. It was never built to.
.A financial institution is built only once. Whatever is settled at its founding stays with it for as long as it stands. We design such institutions, we see them launched, and we remain beside them once their doors are open. Work of that weight cannot be offered to everyone, and it has never been our wish to try.

This House was designed for the few... and it creates... only for the few.
For not everyone can bear the weight of what our standards demand.

Those standards ask a great deal, of us first and of those who come to us after.
We accept few mandates. We would rather decline an engagement than accept one we cannot carry to completion.

So let these words be an invitation... from the House of X-CHASE.
Extended to those... who are not like the rest.

If you have read this far and recognized something of yourself in these lines, you may already know why you are welcome.

X-CHASE. A House for the select few.
Not... for everyone.
